

---

Changes to PHR

Posted by poolhalljunkie - 2008/04/18 20:12

---

Some of you may have noticed that we have gone to a calendar system for our tournaments. We went this route because it was easier to manage for us as well as it just looks better to look at. Everything is categorized, easier to read and we can put them on our nice scroller at the top of every page. The old ad system did the job, but just wasn't the route I wanted to go. I will move items from the old ad system to their new calendar location in the coming days.

Also, I have added a drop-down menu that lists our Pool Halls that we are proud to advertise. This will take you to their contact page and give you all the information about the hall you select. Phone, address, etc. will be available. Also, if they provided an email address to us, you will be able to email them directly from their contact page.

Finally, I have created a Tourney Registration page that will allow visitors to PHR to pre-register for a tournament, give the number of people that will come with you and update it if you decide you can't make it. We won't accept money for the event as we only supply the info for it. Also, you can map out the directions to the pool hall if you like.

As PHR grows into the site we want it to be, there will be growing pains, so if you see something you want changed, let us know! We want to build a site that you want and not a cookie-cutter solution that only serves one need. Oh, one last thing. I will start to add a few more ads here and there as we go and grow. We offer our services for free, so we have to find a way to offset costs that we incur. The sponsors on the site will pay the bills and keep the lights on. :D

Thanks to everyone that has visited and to our faithful partners on the site.

TJ

=====

Re:Changes to PHR

Posted by masterof8ball - 2008/04/19 10:58

---

I would like like to concur with everything TJ has said....As long as the bills are paid, we are up and running 24\7...)

Deadeye

=====